This is where I was...

But this is where I'm going

2021 Annual Report
Dear Friends,

I’m pleased to share Project Safe’s 2021 Annual Report. Our theme is Perseverance, a quality we see exemplified among our clients and staff. We’re taking special inspiration from women athletes and the perseverance required to succeed.

My grandmother, mother, and I all played basketball. When I was young, I played in a boys-only league, because there wasn’t one for girls my age. Being the only girl was hard, and no one was exactly happy for me to be there. If I messed up, it was obviously because girls aren’t as good. If I did well, it embarrassed the boys.

Decades later, when helping mom organize her things in the months preceding her death, we came across something I had totally forgotten about: the tacky trophy for being MVP of that team in my second year. She held onto it for more than 35 years. She wasn’t proud of my basketball playing; but that I persevered.

I will always be most proud of everyone involved with Project Safe when we persevere through difficult situations in furtherance of our belief that everyone deserves to be safe in their home and safe in their relationships. This is how we to make things better for our clients, the community, and those whom we haven’t yet reached. —Joan Prittie
In 2021...

88% of clients achieved their means of support goals
91% of clients achieved their housing goals
97% of clients achieved their other goals
97% of clients reported they increased their knowledge of community resources.
96% of clients reported they learned strategies to enhance their safety.

Perseverance allows us to achieve our goals in the face of barriers and challenges. At Project Safe, our advocates work with survivors of domestic violence to set goals and help them move toward their achievement.

“Don’t wait until you’ve reached your goal to be proud of yourself. Be proud of every step you take toward reaching that goal.” – Simone Biles (Gymnastics)

“Thank you for listening at night when I cried. You met all my needs and helped me so much.”--former shelter client

Signing a lease is a giant step in achieving housing goals for many survivors.
Project Safe provides emotional support to survivors of domestic violence through individual meetings but also through an array of support groups offered at the emergency shelter and through our outreach office.

Sammy (name changed for confidentiality) began attending New Beginnings in 2021. Beatrice (name changed for confidentiality) has been a member of the group for years. What do these two women have in common? Not only are they survivors of domestic violence, they were also both arrested following incidents involving their abusive partners. As we know, sometimes when an officer responds to a scene, it can be difficult to determine who the primary aggressor was. If a victim fights back, the abusive partner may have scratch marks or other wounds on their body, making it seem like they are the victim. This is what happened to both of these women. Sammy felt alone and like no one understood her scary and stressful situation, but through New Beginnings she found Beatrice who was able to relate completely. Witnessing these two women find support and acceptance in the midst of difficult and traumatic events is what I love most about facilitating the New Beginnings group.

The charges against Beatrice ultimately were dropped during the investigation, and her abuser is serving a prison sentence. While Sammy’s situation is still ongoing, the resolution of Beatrice’s case gave her hope and energy on her healing journey. This kind of healing would not have been possible without the virtual format of the group: something we started at the beginning of the pandemic but have continued because it works so well for our participants. Did I mention that Sammy moved in with family out of state after the incident with her abuser? Holding group online allowed her to gain support each week from hundreds of miles away.

When I think of how much I’ve grown throughout my internship and employment at PSI, I first think of the hotline. Before I started my internship, I was terrified of making or answering phone calls. I would put off any calls I needed to make and send every incoming call to voicemail. After spending the first few months of my internship working remotely, I was ecstatic for the chance to finally come into the shelter to get some direct service experience. My excitement turned to fear once I found out that direct service included answering the phone. I tried my strategy of avoidance, but it did not work for very long. The nature of our work leaves no room for procrastination. I was asked to start answering the hotline. And, after years and years of putting off important phone calls and bursting into tears when my parents told me to answer the phone, I just started answering.

I think something in me recognized that there are few things more terrifying than being the survivor on the other end of the phone, who has recognized the dangerous situation they are in, and has no other choice but to tell their most difficult story to a complete stranger. Recognizing that was the instant cure to my lifelong phobia of phone calls that I didn’t know I needed.

Interns in 2021: 39

In 2021...
2393 hotline calls
188 textline conversations
131 clients sheltered
580 clients served in outreach
25 clients served in long term housing

In 2021 Project Safe led the formation of the Child Survivors Initiative of the Domestic Violence Task Force of Athens-Clarke and Oconee Counties. The initiative was inspired by observations of our longstanding Fatality Review Committee. That multidisciplinary group gathers data after a domestic violence homicide or near-homicide to identify patterns or areas for systems improvement to aid survivors, hold domestic violence perpetrators accountable, and to prevent future domestic violence homicides. When looking at older cases of the Fatality Review, a few things became apparent. Children experience unique needs when a parent loses their life due to domestic violence. Caretakers who gain custody of the children are griefing themselves and may not know how to support a grieving child or talk about what happened. The child may be grieving the loss of both parents; one who lost their life and the other that is incarcerated for the murder. Families of the victim and abusive partner may be entrenched in a custody battle. New caretakers may not know all of the resources that are available to them.

Later in 2021, we held a focus group to hear from members of the community their experience with domestic violence related homicide. Some participants in the focus group were adults who, as a child, lost a parent due to domestic violence homicide. Some were grandparents whose adult daughter was killed by an abusive partner, leaving behind a child of her own. One participant was not a family member, but took in children after their mother was murdered. All participants shared valuable feedback that we are incorporating into our ongoing initiative. One clear theme that emerged was for support for new caregivers. While children often have advocates, their new caretakers may not have an advocate themselves to help them navigate through the challenges of unexpectedly caring for a child that has lost a parent in a traumatic way. The Child Survivors Initiative has utilized this feedback to explore avenues to support child domestic violence homicide survivors and their caregivers.
Project Safe has five staff members who work alongside police and other agencies at the Family Protection Center. These advocates are referred to by the Department of Justice as Jessica Gonzalez Advocates—so named for a Colorado woman who was unable to get law enforcement to act upon her desperate pleas for help when her abuser violated a temporary protective order by picking up their three children outside of the agreed-upon schedule. He took the children’s lives as well as his own. Domestic violence advocates might have been able to help law enforcement better understand the nuances of abuse and coercive control, and appreciate the danger inherent in the Gonzalez’ situation—leading to a much quicker response.

In 2021, Project Safe advocates reviewed 1437 police reports for domestic violence and made contact with 533 victims named in those reports to offer services, working closely with law enforcement to identify cases of highest risk. On request from our Chief Judge, we added weekly hours at the courthouse every Tuesday to help people with temporary protective orders. Since its inception in August through the end of 2021, staff met with 30 individuals at the weekly clinic. Contemporaneously with the start of the TPO clinic, we began reaching out to TPO petitioners and contacted 40 individuals in 2021.
Project Safe celebrated the passage of House Bill 231 which went into effect July 1, 2021. This new legislation extends coverage of protection orders in Georgia by creating a new Temporary Protective Order for survivors experiencing dating violence. Prior to the new law, dating couples were excluded from the protections available through the Family Violence Act.

The passage of HB 231 is the most substantive change to Georgia’s Family Violence Act in 29 years. Joan Prittie was involved in the process of drafting the bill and advocating for its passage this spring and then spent time in June with other high level attorneys quickly drafting paperwork for use starting July 1. Prittie states “While I enjoy dusting off my law degree periodically for projects we undertake, the real gratification is working for an organization that sees the big picture and the necessity to focus not only on immediate and long term needs of those experiencing domestic violence, but also on the laws and systems that may allow such violence to persist.”
In 2021 Project Safe continued to persevere without the benefit of our large special events and fundraisers, relying instead on grants, donations, and thrift store revenue to provide the resources to meet the needs of our clients and community. We reaped the benefits of our careful financial sustainability plan crafted as part of our 2020 strategic plan.

FY2021 income and expenses are shown in these charts. Project Safe received $1,434,304 in revenue. Client services accounted for 92% of all spending. Source is Audit 12/31/21 by Robert Baker and Associates, Certified Public Accountants.
Leadership & Recognition

As part of our 2020 strategic plan, Project Safe reorganized to create a four-person leadership team in summer 2021 consisting of Executive Director Joan Prittie, Associate Director Tangela Ferguson, Community Response and Outreach Services Director Donna Bracewell, and Community and Student Engagement Director Mary Haddon. In her new role, Donna Bracewell leads the staff at the Family Protection Center and provides guidance and support for a number of coordinated community initiatives such as Fatality Review, High Risk Team, Firearm Surrender and more. Mary Haddon’s new position includes working with interns and volunteers across all Project Safe programs, leading many educational presentations, and supervising the Breaking Silence staff team. All combined, these four leaders have 67 years of dedicated service at Project Safe.

For Prittie’s part, that service was recognized in November, when she received the 2021 Gender Justice Award given by the Georgia Commission on Family Violence.

In a press release, GCFV’s Co-Chair Paige Whitaker stated “The Georgia Commission on Family Violence agrees that we are long overdue in awarding our own Gender Justice Award to this extraordinarily hardworking changemaker...she is not only a force in her local community of Athens, her impact can be felt around the state.”
